Asana is where many of us begin exploring yoga—on the mat, stretching, twisting, strengthening, sweating, breathing, and experiencing our physical presence in the world. We may be looking for something—more strength, flexibility, stress relief, peace, bliss, perhaps even enlightenment. At some point questions begin to arise. Is there more than this? What is this that I am feeling in my body? How do I still my mind? How do I take my yoga to the next level?

Three-thousand years ago, yogic sages charted the Koshas (sheaths). In this workshop we will look at the Koshas as a way to deepen our connection to our multi-dimensional, energetic bodies—to radically shift our yoga practice to the next level. The Koshas can be thought of as a map, or a template, for exploring our inner world.

According to the Koshas, we are made up of five layers of increasingly more subtle energy. We will play with asana, breath, meditation and other techniques to tap in and connect to these five layers of energy. Bring your curiosity, your mat, and a journal to write in.

through the self, to the Self."
